We moved to Walkers Valley six years ago, and we absolutely loved the beautiful environment, and the peace and quiet that came with moving here. It gave us the inner peace that we desperately needed.

We were subjected, for eight years, to the negative effects of a council that went against what was a sensible decision as to whether or not an activity should be allowed to go ahead. In our case the council let an Aluminium Joinery factory be built on our boundary in a rural production zone, and totally ignored all the adverse effects this would have on the immediate neighbours, and the greater environment. Allowing this integration housing activity here will also have a huge impact on the residents and the environment. If this goes ahead the overwhelming mental effect on the neighbours, to start with, cannot be underestimated. There will also be a huge sense of betrayal, as I believe the council has a responsibility to protect its rate payers in circumstances such as this.

There is also the constant stress that this activity will cause - worry about personal safety, in this case will probably be paramount. But also there will be the feeling of not being able to escape the obvious differences in the environment - visual pollution from the institution itself, the lights, the increased traffic noise & general increase in noise from the site.

Also none can absolutely ensure that this institution being built here will not result in the locals being put at risk. Accidents can and will, always happen. The response time here will be slow because this is a remote and isolated area.

Before we came here, a local resident at the bottom of our road hired prison labour, resulting in two inmates escaping for half a day.

This is a beautiful farming community and I absolutely abhor the fact that someone can decide that Waikite Valley is the appropriate place for an institution such as this - and create all the work that then has to go into ensuring that this does not happen. And it is not even a permitted activity! It is so wrong.

We came to Waikite Valley in need of the environment such as it currently provides, and I will do everything in my power to ensure it stays that way.
